Wolf Pack celebrates Women's History Month: officer edition

By Senior Airman Mya M. Crosby
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

KUNSAN AIR BASE AIR BASE, Republic of Korea -- Looking back, women have gone from second-class citizens to 4-star general officers.

Maj. Gen. Jeannie Leavitt, the Air Force's first female fighter pilot; 1st Lt. Shaye Haver and Capt. Kristen Griest, the first female U.S. Army Ranger School graduates; and retired Gen. Ann Elizabeth Dunwoody, who in 2008 became the first woman to achieve four-star general, are all examples of female officers who took the lead.

At the Wolf Pack, female officers lead at all levels, to include flights, squadrons and groups. According to Col. Jennifer "Falcon" Phelps, 8th Mission Support Group commander, serving at the group level is a humbling experience.

"I have the opportunity to lead some of the best leaders the Air Force has to offer," Phelps said. "I also get to work alongside an outstanding team that truly seeks to take care of Airmen while getting the job done. I really couldn't ask for more.

"Where I am and who I've become is a testament to those people who invested in me, guided me, pushed me and walked with me," she said.

According to Phelps, being an officer presents both formal and informal educational opportunities. Learning is a part of growing as a leader, no matter your rank.

Osan's newest chief remembers past to forge way for future leaders

By Tech. Sgt. Nicholas Alder
51st Fighter Wing Public Affairs

OSAN AIR BASE, Republic of Korea -- In a male dominated service branch like the Air Force, a female chief master sergeant is rare. Luckily, Osan's very own Chief Master Sgt. Syreeta Seamon-Sylvester pinned on the highest enlisted rank which is attained by roughly 1 percent of the enlisted force. Seamon-Sylvester did not let the struggles of being a female Airman stop her from reaching this goal.

"My original plan was to do 4 years and just get out," said Chief Master Sgt. Seamon-Sylvester, 51st Logistics Readiness Squadron Deployment and Distribution Flight Superintendent. "I just had a bad taste in my mouth from the leaders that I worked alongside with. There were still good supervisors in the mix, but just as a new Airman at a new base, I just couldn't see it."

Her story starts like many in the Air Force. A rough patch early on can make or break an Airman's career. Seamon-Sylvester attributes her will to improve and move on to the helping hands of mentors that were by her side the whole way.

"Looking back, I'm glad that I did stay in," said Seamon-Sylvester. "I'm glad that retired Senior Master Sgt. Dan Wolfert and retired Master Sgt. Dwight Crum took me under their wings. They were a blessing in my life and encouraged me to stay in and look at other opportunities. They talked to me about being an Air Force recruiter, which I eventually became".

Mentorship in the Air Force has a long-standing tradition, where the older generation guides the next generation of Airmen through various hurdles and provides life advice for the situations that they may encounter. These mentors helped the young chief in ways that might seem ordinary to most Airmen.

"My immediate supervisor at the time, he was just about numbers, he was just about production. If you were sick, it didn't matter, you had to produce." Seamon-Sylvester said. "With Sergeant Wolfert and Sergeant Crum they were about the people. They would see how you are doing, check in on you if were struggling. They would just be there for you, you know? The little things we miss when communicating."

Her positive experiences with mentorship helped guide her career spanning bases across the globe including being a recruiter and a Military Training Instructor. Still, Seamon-Sylvester was not free from adversity and challenges being a female Airman.

"I was the only female Senior NCO and I was attending staff meetings in a room full of males," said Seamon-Sylvester. "The commander would ask a question and before I could even answer, another master sergeant would always reply off the cuff and the commander would go along with it. Even if I said by Air Force Instruction we're supposed to or not supposed to do this."

It was again her trusted counsel who has advised her throughout her career who provided guidance on how to handle these situations.

"They said that sometimes you just have to let things fail," said Seamon-Sylvester. "Once this happened, the commander then appreciated the value I brought to the team and he started treating me as an equal partner."

After overcoming many obstacles and finally being treated as an equal, Seamon-Sylvester looks to guide the newest leaders of the Air Force in the same fashion she was taught by her mentors. Her two key points are inclusion and teamwork.

"We focus so much on being individuals and getting that individual recognition," said Seamon-Sylvester. "I think we should spend more time on us coming up together. If you and I work together, we can move mountains."

"I tell all my young officers growing up in the intelligence career field, to learn everything you can about your job and mission set," said Maj. Taylor Barela, 8th Operations Support Squadron chief of wing intelligence. "Recognize that it is okay to fail at this level, as long as you learn and grow from those failures."

"It is crucial for us, as young intelligence professionals, to become experts in our mission set," she said. "Not only to execute the mission, but to lead those under our charge. By learning from our successes and failures, we are shaping ourselves for future leadership opportunities in order to pass along our experiences and build the intelligence generations that come after us."

For Phelps, military service and leadership in general can be described as a journey.

"Journey is a great term," Phelps said. "I did not envision serving over 20 years when I graduated in 1998. I knew that I wanted to serve, to travel and to learn. I've been blessed to do those things far more than I thought possible."

"I've served alongside amazing people from all walks of life, many of whom have been my best teachers." As Women's History Month comes to a close, remember to reflect on the progress that's been made and the battles women continue to fight in the name of equality. Learn from those who have gone before.

"I truly learn new things every day, regardless of the shape my classroom takes," Phelps said. "In my mind, that's quite a journey and I am grateful for the opportunities along the way."

HOT WORK SAFETY

Hot work fires result in avoidable death, injury, and hundreds of millions of dollars in property loss each year. When everyone follows safe hot-work practice, these fires are preventable.

The risk with hot work is high because it introduces a hazard—an ignition source. That's why the number one safety recommendation is to determine whether there is an alternative to hot work—by avoiding hot work, you minimize the risk.

Prior to beginning any welding, cutting or brazing operation, welders and/or supervisors shall ensure to obtain a hot work permit from OSAN AB Fire Emergency Services.

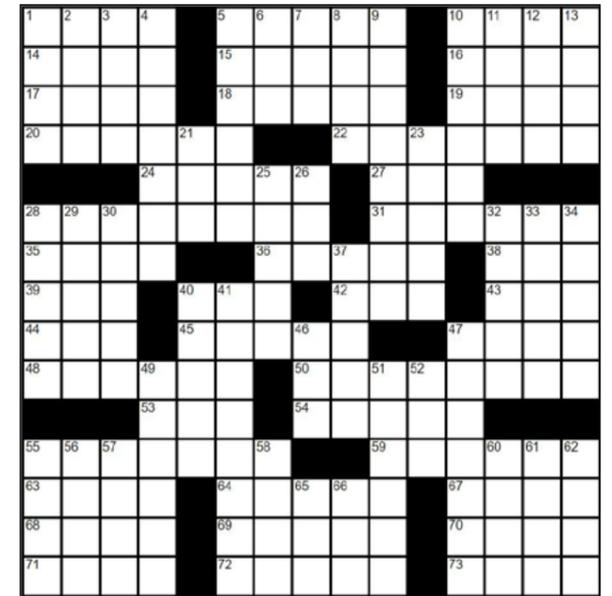

Safety Precautions as follows:

- Combustible material and vegetation within 35 feet of the operation has been removed or separated using flame resistant/rated material (i.e. welding blanket, sheet metal, etc.).
- Flammable materials within 50 feet of the operation have been removed and all flammable vapors in the immediate vicinity have been eliminated.
- All potential hazards are eliminated from the immediate vicinity.
- The proper type/class of a serviceable fire extinguisher is readily accessible.
- All welding equipment is serviceable and in good repair.

Welders and/or supervisors also must follow on AF Form 592 safety checklist issued by OSAN AB Fire Emergency Services. Should you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact Fire Prevention Office at 784-4835/4710.

Spiritual Charge

Leading People Towards The Future

By SrA Thaddeus Blanks

What do you believe makes a significant leader? Is it making sure your followers do their job right? Is it looking after them and making sure they grow? Or even preparing them to lead others by passing on your knowledge to them? I believe all of these key points help to make a great leader. As a leader you need to make sure that not only is the job getting done, but that the people supporting you are even better than they were before you met them. As a leader its important to make sure that those under your supervision are carrying the job forward and that they are getting taken care of as well.

I was once told that it is good to leave a home the same way you found it, but it's even better to leave a home in better condition than when you found it. In fact, one of the Air Force's Core Values encourages this practice: Excellence in all we do. We don't want to be a stagnant military, rather, we want to continue to grow and be better than we were at the beginning of the day. Part of leadership is improving ourselves, the mission, and our supporters.

Before we become leaders though, all of us start off as a followers who are developing knowledge and skills, whether it is for your faith or your job. As time passes along and you get older, you are skilled enough to guide other new followers and pass your skills onto them to ensure they are prepared to lead the mission and guide others towards the mission. In the Bible, Jesus passed on His teachings to the Disciples to prepare them for the day when He couldn't be there to lead them or others.

Matthew 4:19-20 says: "As Jesus was walking beside the Sea of Galilee, he saw two brothers, Simon called Peter and his brother Andrew. They were casting a net into the lake, for they were fishermen. 'Come, follow me,' Jesus said, 'and I will make you fishers of men.' At once they left their nets and followed him."

As a leader, we must also know that the people working for us have an important part to play in the mission. Even Jesus, as mighty as He is, still looked after the people around him and took care of them as well. It is important that as we are taken care of, we make sure to also take care of those supporting and following us. A good example this leadership is found in John 13.

John 13: 13-17 says: "You call me 'Teacher' and 'Lord,' and rightly so, for that is what I am. Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another's feet. I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you. Very truly I tell you, no servant is greater than his master, nor is a messenger greater than the one who sent him. Now that you know these things, you will be blessed if you do them."

Even as a Senior Airman, I found many opportunities to develop as a leader by preparing others, whose duties are similar to mine, to help support the mission. They come through clubs, volunteering at events, and guiding new Airmen shadowing me in the workplace. Leadership opportunities don't come to us at a certain rank or time, but they are presented as opportunities to us when we first come in. Those opportunities are everywhere and I encourage all of you to accept that chance to lead and grow. Because leadership is about leading people to create a better day than the last and more importantly, setting off towards the future!

Wolf Pack celebrates Women's History Month: maintenance edition

KUNSAN AIR BASE AIR BASE, Republic of Korea -- "Be assertive in what you say or believe," said Airman 1st Class Toni Jakes, 80th Aircraft Maintenance Unit crew chief. "To be one of us, it takes tough skin, confidence and being able to stand up for yourself."

With women making up 21% of the military, those in male-dominated career fields, like maintenance, know the meaning of standing up to break barriers and fighting against inequality.

"It does seem like a steep mountain to climb when it comes to being recognized for hard work and dedication as a woman in this career field," said Senior Airman Anastasia Brown, 80th AMU F-16 Fighting Falcon crew chief. "Regardless, I've also had the privilege of coming together with amazing and inspirational women in my career field that have helped shape and mold me into the Airman and hard worker that stands before you today."

Inspired by those who broke barriers before them, female maintainers are no stranger to hard work as they send jets skyward.

"Even after the long hours and crazy weather, I feel a sense of accomplishment," said Staff Sgt. Azby Rockowitz, 80th AMU weapons load crew team lead. "I know I played a part in getting that jet in the air safely and everything worked how it was intended to."

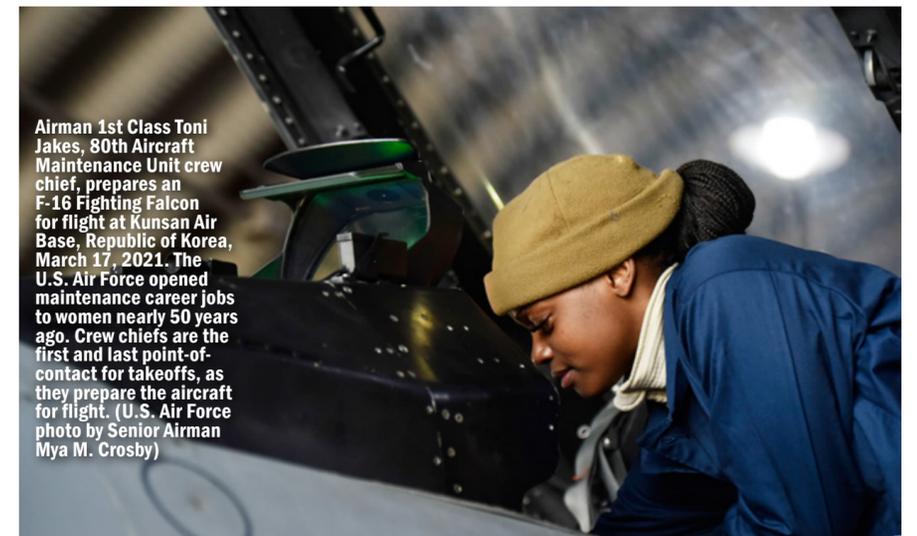

As living proof that every day is a new opportunity to excel, maintainers – male and female alike – work hard and know their role in the overall mission.

"Give it everything -- 100%," Brown said. "No matter what it may be, give your job your all. No matter who you are, where you come from, age, gender, race – none of it can prohibit you from being the best worker anyone has seen. Let your voice be heard and show the nonbelievers what you can do."

"It takes a special type of individual to be able to endure the hardships, long hours, and backbreaking work," Brown said. "As a maintenance Airman you have to be able to be quick on your feet, absorb information, post haste, and as our expeditor says, 'Be like water.'"

To 'be like water,' is a famous analogy posed by Bruce Lee, a Chinese-American martial artist, actor and philosopher. While there are many interpretations of the phrase, according to Lee, water is formless, but it takes on the shape of whatever vessel it fills. Likewise, he said, people should adapt to different situations, allowing their minds to grow and change.

"As many have said before, being a maintainer is a thankless job," Brown said. "It's up to us to take a step back and realize where we are and how far we've come, not only in our careers but in life. Maintainers are the heart of the Air Force."

Seoul's Representative Cultural Art Centers

Seoul Arts Center's Opera House

For all you culture vultures, here is an all-in-one guide to the representative cultural art centers in Seoul! If you have spare time in your schedule or just need a break from touring around the city, consider visiting a performance hall or an art museum. Diverse performances and arts will not only present you with memories, but also nourish your soul!

◀ National Theater of Korea

Established in 1950 as the first national theater in Asia, the National Theater of Korea presents diverse performances spanning Korea's traditional arts, ballet, and opera. World renowned performance groups and organizations from overseas often hold performances here as well. The theater is composed of Haeoreum Theater, the main hall (temporarily closed for remodeling); Daloreum Theater, a smaller theater; Byeoloreum Theater, designed for original performances; and Haneul Theater, an outdoor stage. The National Theater of Korea is especially popular among tourists due to its location near Namsan Seoul Tower and Myeong-dong. The theater is just a 20-minute bus ride from either of these popular attractions.

- Address: 59, Jangchungdan-ro, Jung-gu, Seoul

▼ Seoul Arts Center

Seoul Arts Center features dynamic theater facilities suitable for a variety of performances. The center holds cultural art events in a multitude of genres throughout the year. The signature building of the center is the Opera House, with its unique architectural design like that of a traditional Korean hat. The Opera House stages all kinds of performances, holding on to the true essence of performance arts. In addition to the Opera House, Seoul Arts Center is home to a concert hall, musical fountain, Hangaram Art Museum, Hangaram Design Museum, and Seoul Calligraphy Art Museum. The musical fountain in the outdoor plaza is popular among family visitors.

- Address: 2406, Nambusunhwan-ro, Seocho-gu, Seoul

▲ Sejong Center

Korea's unique traditional architecture is merged with modern design to create the grand yet elegant appearance of Sejong Center. Sejong Center holds a variety of performances of diverse genres including traditional Korean, classics, and even crossovers. The main theater, Grand Theater, has a wide stage equipped with the largest pipe organ in Asia. Sejong Center is a popular attraction among tourists as it is located across from Gwanghwamun Square and Gyeongbokgung Palace.

- Address: 175, Sejong-daero, Jongno-gu, Seoul

▶ National Museum of Modern and Contemporary Art

With the slogan "Art museum in everyday life," the National Museum of Modern and Contemporary Art (MMCA) in Seoul is loved by locals for its display of artwork in addition to being an aesthetic resting spot. Currently, the museum is offering free admission for all exhibitions and displays, although group visitors are not permitted. MMCA is recommended to be added into your itinerary since it is located at the entrance to Samcheongdong-gil Road, near Gyeongbokgung Palace and Changdeokgung Palace.

The Deoksugung Branch of the National Museum of Modern and Contemporary Art is located within a modern stone building that was previously used as the living quarters and personal offices of the emperor. The building's architectural style is just one example of the many Western-style buildings that fill Deoksugung Palace. The museum displays works by both domestic and international artists in the modern and contemporary fields, rotating exhibitions four to five times in a year.

- Address: - MMCA, Seoul Branch: 30, Samcheong-ro, Jongno-gu, Seoul
- MMCA, Deoksugung Branch: 99, Sejong-daero, Jung-gu, Seoul

◀ Seoul Museum of Art

The main building of Seoul Museum of Art (SeMA), which was once used for the Supreme Court, is highly recognized for its splendid modern image after undergoing renovation. Seoul Museum of Art offers a special program evening program starting at 19:00 on the second and last Wednesday of each month. The museum also has an outdoor exhibition area, perfect for leisurely strolls. If you are visiting Deoksugung Palace, consider adding Seoul Museum of Art to your schedule as they are located right next to each other.

In addition to the main branch, SeMA also operates Buk-Seoul Museum of Art and Nam-Seoul Museum of Art. The Buk-Seoul branch is located within Deungnamu Neighborhood Park, with many visitors naturally visiting the museum when at the park. The Nam-Seoul branch is located within the former Belgian Consulate Office. The building is a prime example of the classical architectural style of the early 1900's, a perfect host for modern and contemporary arts.

- Address: - SeMA: 61, Deoksugung-gil, Jung-gu, Seoul
- Buk-SeMA: 1238, Dongil-ro, Nowon-gu, Seoul
- Nam-SeMA: 2076, Nambusunhwan-ro, Gwanak-gu, Seoul

▼ The Story of King Sejong & The Story of Admiral Yi Sun-shin

The basement level of Sejong Center is divided into the exhibition halls of The Story of King Sejong and The Story of Admiral Yi Sun-shin. Each exhibition features displays, videos, and hands-on zones for visitors to learn about these two important figures in Korean history. The Story of King Sejong in particular features a video about King Sejong's life, and a display of traditional Korean instruments created during his reign. In the hall about Admiral Yi, visitors can experience a battle fought in by the Admiral through 3D and 4D videos.

- Address: 175, Sejong-daero, Jongno-gu, Seoul

▲ Hangaram Art Museum

Located inside Seoul Arts Center, Hangaram Art Museum features various plastic arts. It consists of six exhibition halls and an art shop. Most featured exhibitions are based on modern art, making it easier for beginners to approach the world of art. Often visited by people watching performances at Seoul Arts Center, Hangaram Art Museum is convenient to explore due to its open-style exhibition halls.

- Address: 2406, Nambusunhwan-ro, Seocho-gu, Seoul
